Item Description FIELD

Site Data

Grassland, part improved, falling on a constant gradient from NNE corner to SE corner. Western half relatively level (possibly landscaped), some landfill along S side in the vicinity of spring/drain issuing. Eastern half undulating supporting a complex of earthworks. Western half altered by landscaping of former hall with avenues and HaHa. Southern edge possible site of WWII bomb crater later filled, western half a complex of earthworks, building platforms, banks, ditches and raised causeway. Field subjected to metal detecting, finds include ballistics and William III coin. N boundary of post and wire fence becoming post and rail to eastern extent. Eastern boundary a recent hedge line. Southern boundary post and wire with HaHa to south. Western boundary is modern post and wire. Access to field x2 in northern boundary, x1 in western boundary and x1 in eastern boundary all being standard 3 metre vehicle gates. Within the field there is an extensive complex of building platforms within the centre/south of the field on a gentle S facing slope, elevated slightly above the watercourse on the southern boundary. The complex includes three principle platforms each with a rectangular planform aligned ESE. Each platform has a relatively level surface that has been formed by cutting into the uphill slope and making up the ground level on the downslope side. On the southern side of the complex two of the platforms are fringed on their downslope side by a series of minor projecting platforms, each with variable planforms but each integral to the principle platforms. The surface of the platforms support shallow crater like depressions (possible tree boles). The complex appears to be contained by a curvilinear thoroughfare

History Summary

The field remains unchanged until the 1960's but by 1950 the field no longer exists.
