Item Description FIELD

Site Data

This is improved pasture grassland . towards the western extent it rises to plateau standing about 10m above the lower parts of the field. Running south east across the centre of the field are the remains of an old field boundary formed by a slight bank and a line of mature trees. The north east boundary is as above. The north east boundary is formed by a post and wire fence standing above the remains of a haha (feature 176). the ditch is now largely filled but still about 0.5m deep and the retaining wall of sandstone blocks is still in place and stands an average of 1.0m above ground level. the south eastern boundary consists of a post and wire fence and parallel with it on the inside are the remains of a hollow way which appear to be the feature 170 which is in this field and not the adjacent one. the south western boundary is a mature hedge contiguous with the Ripley road. Throughout the field and running south east are the remains of ridge and furrow measuring approximately 9m from crest to crest and most probably medieval in origin.

History Summary

The field has basically remained unchanged from the middle 19th century until the present day, early 20th century. The minor change was the loss of a small enclosure from the field to field 17 in the mid 20th century. A number of maps show the field merged with field 72 but in practice it has remained a separate field.
