Item Description QUARRY

Site Data

This is a large quarry situated on the northern edge of the wood on Coney Garth and at the eastern end. It is set amongst the trees within the wood and is up the slope about eight metres. The exposed faces stretch over about 100 metres and stand up to five metres high at the maximum and consist of magnesium limestone doleritic in character. Some sections look suitable for building stone. Others may have supplied stone for creating agricultural lime.

History Summary

A quarry which was described as old in 1890 but appears on the 1854 map. Almost certainly a disused quarry from mid 19th century to present day.
